

Being a resilient city starts with a choice

A new tool towards urban solutions: the URTF - Urban Resilience Task Force

How is your city dealing with increasingly fast-moving changes? How to act with the same speed?

In these challenging times, standing still is moving backwards. Being ready to anticipate and prevent adverse impacts, take advantage of any new opportunities and embrace change is not an easy task but it's much easier if you're not alone on your journey.

What to expect from us?

The Urban Resilience Task Force (URTF) is a new tool for local and regional authorities worldwide developed by ICLEI and ISOCARP.

The URTF builds a dedicated, pro-active and rapid urban solution, addressing the specific and individualised needs of local and regional authorities. The International Team is comprised of 10-14 experts from various disciplines committed to work collaboratively, contributing their breath of experience and expertise to help cities anticipate, face and react to fast-moving changes and challenges.

Within 5-7 days, the Team works closely with local actors in tackling resilience. Following deep and intensive working process it develops a technical report, proposals and recommendations on how to best handle extremely challenging events. Presentations and recognitions at International Conferences will promote local achievements and provide opportunities to share news, ideas and good practice.

Doing what cities need next

There is no one simple solution for all cities. ISOCARP and ICLEI are able to build tailor made URTFs for specific locations, tasks and topics and form fast response teams within four weeks.

URTFs secure a rapid response to challenging urban situations in local and regional authorities.
